Odor Control Project to Conclude this Summer

The Borough of Conshohocken Authority's long-awaited odor control project has reached the final stage to completion. The project, which incorporates state-of-the-art improvements to dramatically reduce odors coming from its facilities, is expected to conclude by August.

Preparations have been ongoing following an odor control study in 2014. Results of the study were input into an EPA-approved air dispersion modeling program to identify the processes that most needed odor control. As part of the $2.3 million project, the Authority continues to go above and beyond the recommended odor control treatments in its strides to be a good neighbor.

The project was expected to conclude on June 15. The Authority board, following a recommendation from its engineer and a thorough review of its findings, opted to extend the contract to July 15. The minor extension was needed after the contractor determined that soils at the equipment pad were insufficient. A series of 12-foot-deep soil borings found that the addition of geofoam – a type of Styrofoam – was necessary to bulk up the soupy soil.

The odor remediation project will reach completion two to three weeks after July 15, according to

Executive Director Stephen Clark.

Already the Authority is fielding far fewer inquiries related to odors, due in large part to the significant reduction in odors, he said. Odors will continue to diminish following project completion.
